The Earl of Derby replied that he sympathizes with the caricelty of those who had watched the course of foreign affairs for the last few weeks. Govern ment desired to conceal nothing it had done, but it would be impossible to give a full account without largely using confidential communications relative to the opinions of other Covernments, who would object to such disclosure. The publication of these communications would prevent English diplomatists from receiving information in future, and to submit a multilated correspondence might mislead the House The causes of dispute were liable to recur; therefore it was not desirable, in the interests of peace, to give publicity to the details of the controversy. Lord Derby then proceeded to state that persons, the highest in authority in Berlin, of late openly declared that the French army had become the source of danger to Germany, because its magnitude showed a deter mination on the part of France to renew the war: that Germany, in self-defense, might feel impelled to strike the first blow to secure peace, and that it was necessary that the French army be considerably reduced. This language, repeated by German representatives here and elsewhere, created an extreme messiness in France. The French Government a once disclaimed all warlike intentions. Lord Derby said that he sincerely believed no statesman in France contemplated a renewal of the war. France, after ber humiliations, naturally desired to have an army which would give ber the influence to which she considered herself entitled. One of the difficulties was that France was unable to conceive that the German apprehensions were genuine. They regarded the representations made by many as a pretext for a fresh war, and it seemed to her Majesty's Government there was a mutual misunderstanding which might lead to grave consequences for Germany. The step might have been a formal request for France to discontinue her armament, while France would probably hasten it, and thereby confirm the suspicions of Germany. The existence of this mutual distrust afforded a good opportunity to offer the friendly offices of England, and Russia saw things in the same light, | Casks Walnuts, and the visit of the Emperor Alexander to Berlin supplied means of supporting England's representations Lord Derby concluded by declaring England had done her duty without sacrifice of the past, present or prospective. She had entered into no engagement, and made no pledges; but her policy of non-interven-
